

Hello bhairab.... So if I put down my things here, things make so much sense now when you kept connecting my actions to my fears... I do have a really really huge fear of missing out & Iq its much deeper than just wanting to be around people or wanting to have fun.

Especially when I'm in the department with Noshin, Duljit and everyone, even when I don't particularly want to stay sometimes, even when I'd genuinely rather come and spend time with you, if there is nothing else happening and they are there... I ~~be~~ somehow end up staying.

And yes you're right... This is my own pattern. And I don't want to make it sound like I was doing that because I valued being with them more than being with you or something... That was never ever what was happening inside me... But I also understand that intentions don't change what the action looked like from your side, and yes I understand just how much that actions must have affected you :ccc... īī... I think my fear comes from this horrible horrible feeling that if I ~~leave~~ leave ~~at~~ in that moment, I might miss something that I should have known. And by something, I don't necessarily mean anything huge. Like thoughts such as sometimes it's something as simple as them talking about a project, or saying they are going to meet some prof. or some kind of opportunity.. like a lot of times they keep buttering or connecting with seniors and knows things through those circles, and I have this constant feeling inside me that I don't know enough. And yes even when a part of me genuinely wants to leave and spend time with you.... There have been so many times where I could have just chosen to leave but something inside my head would go....

what if they discuss some project?

what if they decide to approach some teacher?

what if they hear about an opportunity from a senior?

what if something important gets discussed after I leave?

What if everyone knows something I don't?

what if I miss one piece of information that I actually needed?

And I think this fear gets stronger because a lot of time they talk to seniors, they know about things I don't necessarily know about and maybe sometimes opportunities of project-related or anything like that information genuinely does come through these conversations

So somewhere along the way, my brain started treating being physically present as a form of security. Like ~~at~~ if I stay, at least I know what is happening.

If I leave, I don't know what I might miss. And I guess this is so stupid to have that fear that I might lose some opportunity or something and ofcourse it's genuinely stupid and the uncertainty of not knowing scares me much more than I realised. Sometimes I don't even know what exactly I should be asking people.

Sometimes I feel like I don't know enough to even know what information I'm supposed to look for. So it's like when I see an opportunity to simply be there and maybe hear something, my brain tells me that I should'n't leave... And that is why even when I don't ~~pro~~ particularly want to be there, I stay even when there isn't anything important happening. I stay because my mind keeps telling me that something might happen.

And I realise how unfair that became for you "

Because from your side, you weren't seeing all these complicated fears inside me. But yet I still stay because my fear gets louder than what I actually want. And now strange thing is, when I actually say it out loud here like this, this doesn't sound like some huge thing. But it has absolutely so freaking controlled my actions more than I ever realised myself. It's like my fear got louder than what I actually wanted. And I think that this needs to sink in me... to understand it... This isn't about them, or you or anyone. It is ofcourse about my fear of being left out, my fear of not knowing enough, fear of missing an opportunity, my fear that If I don't stay in that exact moment, somehow I'll lose something I can't get back. All these are subconsciously what builds up in my head... and I don't even realise it unless I really reflect on such thoughts. And yes I can see how these connect to everything you were telling me yesterday. I keep trying to prevent a future feeling. I keep thinking, what if I miss this, what if I don't know something, what if something happens. And then I make my decision based on that possibility instead of what is actually happening in front of me. My fear gets to decide for me. And Bhairab, I'm really so sorry :c I remember you told me something similar earlier as well while I did understand what you meant at that time... but in underlying I never understood how exactly these drove me down. And I understand this hurts... I have hurt you bhairab, and I regret it so much. I don't want you to compete with my fear of missing out baby ♡. I don't want my fear to decide where I go, what I do, or who I give my time to. And I think yesterday's conversation genuinely made me ~~realise~~ realise that I have to become OKAY... with not knowing everything. I have to become okay with missing some information.

classmate
Date _____
Page _____

I have to become okay with not being present for every conversation. I have to become okay with the possibility that somebody might know something I don't... because maybe I don't need to know everything... Maybe sometimes I just need to trust myself enough to know that if something genuinely matters, I will figure it out somehow.. And If I miss something, I'll deal with it. I don't need to sacrifice every other thing just to make sure I never miss anything. I couldn't bring myself to do it before. But I think I really needed someone to shake me out and make me see how much this fear controlled outputs....

And I don't want it to anymore... And I'm also becoming more aware that there may be some behaviours in me that I don't even consciously notice anymore... Some of the anxious ways I react, some of the things I overthink, some of the ways I try to protect myself from outcomes... I think some of them may have crept into me from things I experienced in my past relationship too... No, not as an excuse for anything I've done. I don't want to blame my past for the way I've treated you. These are still my actions, and I'm responsible for them. But I think sometimes we carry little ways of protecting ~~us~~ ourselves from one relationship into another without even realising that we're doing it. Something becomes a habit because at some point our mind thought it was keeping us safe. And maybe somewhere along the way, I became this way without even noticing how much of it had stayed with me. Maybe that's why sometimes my reactions don't even make sense to me until I sit down and really think about them. But I don't want to use that as a reason to stay the same. I don't want to sabotage something good because of fears and petty things that were created somewhere before this. I don't want to make you pay for things you didn't do. I don't want to keep healing to you based on things that happened before you. I don't want to keep hurting myself either by constantly preparing for something bad to happen when nothing bad is actually happening. If these patterns have become a part of me, then I want to ~~to~~ consciously unlearn them. I think that is also part of choosing myself... Not allowing old fears, old habits or old ways of protecting myself to decide who I become in this relationship. I want ~~to~~ to understand where they come from, but I also ~~to~~ want to take responsibility for what I do with them now.

I don't want my past or neither constant future uncertainty become the reason I sabotage my present.

Oh there's something else I ~~was~~ was thinking today. You told me about how, I can say everything I'm, but eventually what matters is what I actually do. And I understand that. I don't want it to be something like I keep telling you "I'll change, I'll do better, I'll be different" etc. and expect those words itself to mean something by themselves, honestly they should not... I think you should be able to see it and maybe that's also why I started thinking about some of the things you've already pointed out to me. I remember you once told me earlier as well, the way I check your phone and chats made you feel like a criminal. And yes that stayed with me... after that I genuinely remember that I did not go through your chats that way.. As far as I remember, whenever I've had your phone with me after that, I might open your camera, music or something random, ~~but I don't~~ I once remember you went somewhere I had your phone with me and I did not once check your phone chats not when you are not around... I think noshin or gift aribo jaute ghoosor pora. Yes I do remember moments where I still slipped.. I remember seeing that text you sent noshin about not coming to school and I asked you whether you talked that way to everyone... ~~to~~ I remember watching the photos you sent JPM sir and ~~so~~ things around it ... and even yesterday, I did look at Instagram... I'm not going to erase those things from my own understanding just because I'm trying to tell you that I've improved. I did those things... And I need to be aware of them. But I also want to acknowledge that when you explained me what my checking made you feel like... I actually did take it seriously... Yes, I don't want to repeat it - Because I understand it more now... It wasn't just checking but it made you feel watched, feel like you had prove that you were innocent... I don't want to make you anything like that... I want to trust you without needing to inspect you... I also wrote and realised a lot of things yesterday... Today I watched a video actually... It talked about two important questions that partners should be able to ask each other: What are you angry with me about? and How have I scared you recently

And this made me realise something... about communicating... If we notice, sometime we do say it out loud isn't it chase its in isl... but sometimes the situation can be viewed very differently as well right... And one think is that I don't want us to only ask those questions when we're already at a point where everything hurts. I want us to eventually be able to ask each other those things while we're still okay. I want to know what I'm doing that makes you angry, or disappointed or sad... or what makes you feel unseen... what makes you feel unsafe with me... what makes you feel careful around me. And no, I don't want to hear those things to defend myself or something but I want to hear you better, to understand you and I want you to know that you can ask me the same... like I say sometimes "nuk moom koni de..." or "something else"

I want you to say ... I want to hear them too to ask me... to be able to tell you if something scares you or me whether its a mistake

classmate

Date _____
Page _____

or a moment taken casually ... Not to keep scores .. Not to make the mistakes equal but because so that both of us to be able to apologise, to be able to forgive, to be able to teach each other how we want to be loved. And both of us to actually learn - The ability to apologise, to forgive, to teach, to learn

I think it becomes stronger when we know that we can accept that us -- we both will hurt each other sometimes but we can recognise it, talk about it, to disagree, to agree, to point out the wrongs, to say out loud the boundaries.
And everything else... To address the issues separately, resolve and to repair. To see the good... to see the intension... even when our mind our fears, our insecurities tries onto projecting its way through... And ofcourse I am so sorry love ♥

I didn't ever mean for things to go this far... to this level of hurt. And I would like to ask for your forgiveness too, not immediately but, not because suddenly everything needs to be okay... you are allowed to feel the hurt -- and I am allowed to reflect on my actions... And all the time and everything else we choose, I choose to ~~make~~ make you feel... I am asking for your forgiveness not because what happened was okay but because ~~it is a~~ to not letting it decide what comes next.. ♥. will you forgive me bhai sahab??